

Edward J. Fortunato
Chief Economist,
Exelon Corporation

Over the last seventeen years at Exelon, Edward has managed the proprietary trading book, the short-term analytics group, and has led the implementation of trading strategies in both the proprietary and hedging books and run the fundamental analysis group. As the chief economist he tracks economic trends and how they affect our company.

Prior to working at Exelon, Edward served as the vice president of natural gas trading at Merrill Lynch Global Commodities, and as a senior energy trader at Edison Mission Energy. Edward has an MBA with high honors in finance from Boston University and a BBA from Baruch College. He is an active community member, involved with Our Daily Bread since first arriving in Baltimore. He is on Partners in Excellence and Marian House board and is the chair of the Loyola University Maryland's data science board. Ed lives in Ellicott City Maryland with his wife and dog.
