

Robin Wigglesworth

Global Finance Correspondent, Financial Times

As the global finance correspondent at the Financial Times, Robin Wigglesworth focuses on the biggest trends reshaping markets, investing, and finance more broadly across the world, with a particular focus on technological disruption and quantitative investing, and writing longer-form features, analyses, profiles, and columns.

He was previously the FT's US markets editor, spearheading its coverage of financial markets and asset management across the Americas, deputy head of FastFT, capital markets correspondent, and Gulf correspondent.

Before joining the Financial Times in 2008 he worked at Bloomberg News.

Robin's latest FT articles include: The dangerous private capital party; The ten trillion dollar man: how Larry Fink became king of Wall St; Inside the cult of crypto.
